

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND RECOMENDATION

5.1 Conclusion

According the result of this study, the researcher conclude that there were two motivations that influence the EFL students in learning English at University of Muhammadiyah Gresik and that was intrinsic and extrinsic motivation. From the four participants who involved in this study, it was revealed that two participants had intrinsic motivation while the two other had extrinsic motivation as the most influential motivation that influenced them in learning English. While for the process of how the two motivations (both intrinsic and extrinsic motivation) influence them was by the time they learnt English with different way.

5.2 Recommendation

The recommendation part is made for the next researcher in doing the same research and the recommendation is the next researcher can add more participants in their study because the more participants involves the better result will be got and it will be vary. Other recommendations for the next researcher is giving more research instruments in his/her study to make sure the result of his/her study is really valid and well proven.

The last recommendation for the next researcher is giving a wide explanation about type and level of motivation and explain it in a detail way. The next researcher can have more research instrument and more theory of that as well. Not only using one research instrument but also using more than one instrument as well. Using Prapphal's Attitude Testing for instance and that is for creating a variety of question which relate to the study.
